WHEAT

United States Wheat Situation
United States department of agriculture estimates the winter wheat crop of that country at 326,087,000 bushels which, if realized will be the lowest bushings harvested from that area in this century at least. The crop was seeded under unfavorable conditions; last autumn was dry, the winter dry and cold, and deterioration has been steady. The estimate was lower than anticipated by private crop estimators. Prices in Chicago and other United States grain markets rose following the publication of the estimate on April 16. Winnipeg followed more sluggishly. In Canada many people are talking about the possibility of United States having to import Canadian wheat before the end of next crop year. However, the United States spring wheat crop has yet to be harvested and possibly the hard supplies in that country will not be overstocked by casual commentators.

U. S. Wheat Prices Above U. S. wheat prices have soared above world parity. The Chicago close on April 17 was 67c for July as compared with Winnipeg 64c. The actual gold price difference was about 18 cents as the Canadian price should be discounted about 30 per cent. The superior quality of the Canadian wheat would provide for a further margin of spread. Of course U. S. wheat cannot be exported at the prices prevailing here in competition with other exporting countries.

Banner's Co-operative Movement
A recently published report on the Banner co-operative movement states that at the end of 1932 there were 71,880 members in this co-operative. There are 46,784 societies with 167,623 distribution centres, consolidated together in 58 great unions. The turnover of these societies for 1931 amounted to 17,232,000,000 bushels.

Stocks of Wheat at Lathlam
Stocks of wheat at Port William and Port Arthur are 75,000,000 bushels, or 15 million bushels greater than a year ago.

Argentine Newspaper Advice
Holding Wheat Stocks

The Times, a prominent newspaper of Argentina, advises farmers in that country to hold their wheat at higher prices. This is an unusual attitude for the Times to take as it has been a consistent advocate of wheat selling and it knows Argentine conditions where any holding of wheat must of necessity be done on the farms, as elevator storage space is limited. The Times says the wheat situation is due for a change with higher prices and says so candidly.

British Flour Mix

It is reported that British millers are now using the following flour mix (approximately): Canadian No. 1 Northern 40 per cent, Argentine 25 per cent, and 35 per cent. The high grade of Argentine wheat is used because its greater strength offsets the deficiency in that respect of the current Argentinean wheat crop.

Stabilization Board Debaunched

The United States Grain Stabilization Board has been discontinued and its holding are being gradually liquidated. From March 1 to March 31 the board disposed of over 13 million bushels of wheat futures, the holding at the end of March being 1,511,000 bushels. The rate is that month prices on the Chicago market increased 15 per cent.

Cheap Barley

Canadian barley can be obtained more cheaply by a man living in Vancouver than one living in British Columbia, and the English or German livestock breeder can buy it cheaper than the livestock man of Eastern Canada.

The Tower of Babel

"The gods sell all things at a fair price," said an old poet. He might have added that they sell all their best goods at the highest prices. All that is really useful to us can be bought for little money, it is only the superfluous that is put up for sale at a high price. The gods sell the clouds sailing along in the sky, the forests and the fields, the glorious sea, all without spending a

DEATH REMOVES EARLY PIONEER

Death removed another Bassano early pioneer in the person of James McGarry, who died Sunday, April 16, about 4 a.m., in the Bassano hospital. He was 78 years of age.

Mr. McGarry was a patient in the hospital for several months, having an infected toe which later necessitated the amputation of his foot. He was in good spirits and coming along fine when he died suddenly. Death is attributed to metazoemia.

Mr. McGarry was born in Weston, West Virginia. At eighteen years of age he left for the cattle ranges of Mexico and Texas. He was one of the early pioneers of this part of Alberta, coming here in 1905 with the Bedford cattle which ranged in the Stoville district. He worked on various ranches along the Red Deer and Bow rivers, and had a place of his own near the Bull Point north of Glenora, and a farm near Sherburne. The Bull Point place was sold to Andy Andrews a few years ago.

Mr. McGarry was a sister, Miss Sally McGarry, at the old home in Weston, West Virginia. The body was shipped on Monday evening to Winnipeg for burial.

Friends and acquaintances deeply regret the passing of one of the district's earliest inhabitants.

BOWLING

Scores in men's Canadian bowling are getting higher. The province sees a new high mark set up. Last week Jim Hamilton, who topped the scoring list, with a 91, bowled a 92. Bill made his score early in the week, and not until Saturday night was it beaten by Jim Hamilton. This week a new record will be hung up, as Jimmy Pierson has already bowled a 94, and others are trying to better it. He is an old-time bowler, and not until this week did he win his stride.

The ladies, too, are making new records in the Canadian game, and have won rival the men. Mrs. A. McKee bowled 73 last week to take first prize in this division. Miss Grace Scher won the prize in the American game for ladies with a score of 157.

JIMMY JERSON NOW

HANDSOME NEW CAROLINE
A. P. Pierson, president of the Bassano Service Station, makes an important announcement to all motorists. There has been quite a demand for a lower priced gas line, and to meet this demand Mr. Pierson has shipped in a supply and is now selling it from one of his gas pumps.

The birds sing to us for penny, the wild flowers we may pick as we are walking along the roadside. There is no entrance fee to the starry hall of the night. The poor man sleeps better than the rich man. Simple good food is the ran, better than the food from flint. Contentment and peace of mind thrive better in a small country cottage than in the "stately palace" in a town. A few friends, a few books, indeed a very few, and a dog, all you need to have about you as long as you have yourself. But you should live in the country. The first town was planned by the Devil, that is why God wanted to destroy the tower of Babel.

Heavy Snowfall Makes Ideal Conditions For Spring Seeding

Master Gift From Weather Man Is Most Welcome to Farmers—nearly an Inch of Moisture Makes Spring Conditions Favorable.

Snow—light or more inches of it—soft, wet snow, covered the whole countryside following last Monday's storm.

The precipitation put farmers, businessmen, and everybody, in a happy frame of mind, for it brought nearly an inch of water (estimated) which will put the land in ideal shape for spring farm work. The moisture will be sufficient to give the 1933 wheat crop a good start. After threatening all day Sunday with a cold northerly wind and occasional snow flurries, the storm began to ease about 10 o'clock morning and continued nearly all day.

There was little drifting and the wet snow lay practically on the level wherever it fell.

Motor traffic was hindered, particularly west of here in the vicinity of Calgary where a snowfall of eighteen inches was recorded. The buses running through Bassano were running a little shoddy schedule, and as late as Wednesday, with some snow still on the ground and water everywhere, trucks and cars were having difficulties on dirt roads and around the town outskirts.

It is a tedious snowfall to record, but it is a welcome one, and will do a world of good.

NURSERY MAN BUSY

Harry, the proprietor of the Bassano Nursery, is very busy these days preparing hundreds of cabbage, tomato and cauliflower plants, and thousands of raspberry canes for the spring business.

CROWFOOT, April 19—The farmers are all rejoicing over the recent snowfall. Some are predicting bumper crops; others are rather pessimistic, saying it will do more difference—we'll probably get halved out or else the grasshoppers will eat them all.

HEART OF THE MATTER

RUBY M.
AYRES
© WINDY PEARL CO.

"You want me?" She could feel his heart beating against hers. "Do you want me—as I want you?" May I stay?"

Barbara closed her eyes, and her whole being seemed to clamor just one passionate word in reply. "Yes, yes, yes—"

"But something—she never knew what it was—kept her from speaking it aloud."

"Dennis— if — tomorrow — you will wait?"

"Tomorrow! Tomorrow never comes," he broke in almost violently. "How do you know what may happen tomorrow? Tomorrow may find me away, my dear. I love you so much. Barbara, for God's sake," she disengaged herself from his arms her face.

"Tomorrow, Dennis, if you still want me—I swear—"

In the end she sent him away, how she never knew, and when he had gone she stood against the door that shut him out, her eyes closed, utterly exhausted, and tears raining down her face.

"She loved him so much, and yet she had sent him away. Why? Why? God alone knew."

She was reassured by a little sound in the passage, and she looked up to see Mrs. Mellish, in a drab gray dress, gazing, watching her with kindly eyes.

"Come to bed, my dear—I'll get you something hot to drink."

Barbara laughed sobbingly. "I've been a fool, Mellish," she said. "I've been a silly damned fool. I've sent away the only man I ever loved."

Mrs. Mellish took her hand and patted it. "He'll come back," she comforted. "Barbara broke away from her, sobbing."

"Tomorrow never comes," she wept. "Tomorrow never comes."

thought you would refuse to come."

"I ought to refuse now," she sighed. "You said my head and looked at him. 'Dennis, this isn't really me at all. I used to be so happy—and now, I feel young and warm, and without a care in the world.' But Dennis O'Hara's eyes were sad as he looked away from her, and the words of Pauline's letter came back to him like a sad reproach. "If anything happened that we were separated, I should die."

They spent a happy evening. "We'll forget everything but that we are together," Barbara said. So they danced and danced and talked of things that were farthest from their hearts. It was as if they were leaving that they came face to face with Jerry Barnett.

He had obviously been drinking, and Barbara shivered and drew closer to Dennis. "He pretended not to see us," she whispered. "I think he is a little jealous of you."

It was a happy evening and yet, nothing was settled. It was like going round and round in a circle. Dennis thought savagely when they were back again in Barbara's flat and she was telling him it was time to go. He looked at her as he took off her wrap, and suddenly he said, "Are you ever going to choose between us?"

She turned. "What do you mean?"

He laughed unhappily. "Well—there is Barnett and your husband and myself—the all want you."

The delicate color tinged the whiteness of her face.

"But I only want one of you, Dennis. You know which one."

He answered doggedly that she could have him if she wished.

"You have bewitched me, Barbara. I seem to be feeling but desire for you. I can't—God forgive me—even be sorry for Pauline. He went close to her and looked down at her with passionate eyes. "Let me say, Barbara. Something seems to tell me that if you send me away tonight I shall never come back. Oh, my dear—don't you love me well enough? If I'm willing to throw everything away for you—"

"But—on your wedding," she whispered. "Isn't it only just for tonight because we are alone? And tomorrow—"

"Tomorrow may never come."

She turned away, and for a moment there was a breathless silence. Why did she hesitate? Barbara asked herself desperately. She was not generally scrupulous; as a rule she took what she wanted of life and let tomorrow take care of itself; but now, when Dennis would have touched her, she gently repulsed him.

"Wait—let me think."

He moved away from her impatiently and began pacing the room. Barbara stood very still, looking into the heart of the fire. Her pulses were racing, and she put a hand on the mantelpiece to steady herself, and it was at that moment she saw the letter addressed to herself in Pauline's writing.

She took the letter and hid it in the folds of her gown; then she returned. "Come here, Dennis."

He came at once and took her in his arms. He could not speak, and his lips burned as they touched hers. After a long time he whispered: "Do

FOURTEENTH INSTALLMENT
The said, "Good evening, sir," her quiet voice and led the way into the sitting room.

"Mrs. Stark will not keep you long, sir," she hesitated, looking at him with those cold eyes that saw so much and betrayed so little.

"Mrs. Stark has been a little upset," she added.

"Upset!"

"I expect Mrs. Stark will explain to you, sir."

She went away, leaving Dennis to wait impatiently.

When she came he saw that she was ready, dressed and wearing a gown he had once admired. He went quickly to her and took her hands.

"What is it, my dear? A little upset," she smiled. "Did Mellish tell you? Bless her heart! She knows there is nobody else I should ever tell my troubles to, Dennis." She bent and dropped a kiss on his coat sleeve. "Mix some cocktails, please, and I'll tell you."

She sat down by the fire and watched him; then suddenly she spoke.

"I had an unexpected visitor to-day, Dennis."

"Oh!" He was not greatly interested. "Who was it?"

"My husband."

The fragile stem of the glass he was holding snapped suddenly between Dennis O'Hara's fingers. He had forgotten that Barbara had a husband living.

"I thought you never saw him," he said with his effort.

"I haven't—yet. He came this afternoon. I had an idea he was in New York."

There was a little silence. "What did he want?" Dennis asked sharply. She lifted her beautiful eyes.

"He asked me to go back to him."

Dennis stood very still for a moment.

"I told him I would think about it. There was a long silence. 'You know he divorced me,' she said presently.

Dennis did not answer.

Her face whitened, and she said almost in a whisper: "It wasn't true, Dennis, but—not what you think. But I was as tired of him as he was of me, so I let him think what he liked. I swear it's the truth."

"That's no need. I always believe you."

"Pauline, Dennis." But there were tears in her eyes—so often now there seemed to be tears in her eyes.

"Well—go on," Dennis said after a moment.

She sighed and leaned her chin in her hand.

"I've never seen him since—well, since then, until today. He was everywhere. I've always had plenty of money. And now he wants me to go back to him. My eyes have never left his face. 'He says he has never cared for any woman but me, Dennis.'"

"And you told him you would think about it—about going back to him?"

"Did he give you a time limit?" Dennis was white to the lips.

"She shook her head. 'No—I promised to write to him.'"

She stood up suddenly beside him, tall and beautiful and so utterly desirable, that for a moment Dennis O'Hara closed his eyes. "Then she said, 'What's the use of hoping for anything for me, I mean? You know what you think you can't do—what you think you can't do—'

"You mean—tell Pauline?"

"Yes."

He clenched his hands into fists. "Barbara—there must be some other way."

"Yes," she smiled tremulously. "You might come here secretly—just for a few days. We should be happy for the little time we could be together and unhappy for the great while when we had to be apart. And then—"

"I should only mind for your sake."

She shook her head sadly. "It wouldn't hurt me—it wouldn't hurt me any more than the things people say about me already. But you, Dennis—it would break your heart."

"Am I such a weakling?"

"No, if you were it would not matter."

He paced up and down the room restlessly.

"If I were an honest man I should go to Pauline and tell her the truth; go to Pauline and tell her as much as it will if some day she finds out that I love you and that I think of you every moment and was you—"

"Yes, because you are an honest man that you can't tell her," Barbara said, and then, as he did not answer, she took up her cloak and held it to him.

"Let us go, Dennis—Dr. Stora-away will be waiting."

He took the cloak from her, but as he laid it over her shoulders, he suddenly enfolded her with his arms, pressing her head back against his breast. "Barbara—kiss me—"

Her lips moved to say no but Dennis silenced the word with his own, and for a long time they stood while Barbara gave herself up wholly to the intoxication of the moment.

"Just this once—for at least time," he told himself. "Just this once—for the very last time."

And when at last he released her she was white and shaken and could not meet his eyes, though she tried to laugh.

"Nobody has ever kissed me like that, Dennis," she said faintly.

"And was it—happiness?" he asked.

"It was—heaven," she whispered. He told her about themselves, as they drove away together, her cheek against his shoulder, her hand in his. "I didn't tell you before."

"I had an unexpected visitor to-day, Dennis."

Sir Thomas Horder, distinguished physician of London, England, has stated:-

"The willing and happy worker will get more done and do it better than the unwilling and discontented worker. It is in this direction that alcoholic beverages like beer make their great contribution to economic efficiency."

"Appetite is a function of the brain as much or even more than of the stomach, and its importance in the physiology of digestion and nutrition is very great. It is stimulated by a moderate use of such a beverage as beer, and at the same time zest is given to life which results in larger and richer activities."
